TOM HANSON

White's diaries are replete with reference to "Hanson" in relation to the various activities including the Chestnut Street safe house. "Hanson" was identified as Thomas Hanson, the former Special Agent-In-Charge of the U.S. Secret Service office in San Francisco. Through the Secret Service in San Francisco, we were able to determine that Tom Hanson is retired and is currently residing at 400 Warner Lane in San Gabriel, California, telephone number [redacted]

From what we were able to learn in San Francisco, White and Hanson were somewhat inseparable as far as their social relations were concerned. They were both very heavy drinkers and lunched almost daily at the Kuo Wah Restaurant in China Town, San Francisco. On Tuesday, March 27, I telephoned Hanson's residence in San Gabriel in initial attempts to determine the extent of his knowledge on the safe house operations in San Francisco. After identifying myself and explaining the purpose of my call to a female who answered the phone, there was a muffled conversation and the unidentified female advised me that Mr. Hanson would neither speak to me on the phone or in person.

In further attempts to "just speak to him for a moment," I was told by the female that Mr. Hanson has been consistently and unduly bothered by representatives of various media concerning his long-time association with George White and is, therefore, "fed-up" and, therefore, adamantly refuses to discuss the issue with anyone.
